Bryce Makes a Speech

In addition to the speakers hitherto named. James Bryce, Ambassador from Great Britain to the United States, worldwide authority on Americans and their institutions, who has been prominently mentioned-a report Mr. Bryce has refused either to affirm or deny-as the successor of Dr. Woodrow Wilson as president of Princeton University, told of the scholastic, moral, and social advantages of a university education, and paid particular attention to a comparison of Engish and American institutions of advanced learning-a comparison by which American colleges and universities did not not suffer.

The impression left by the three speakers most closely associated in the political life of this country-President Taft. Senator Depew, and Representative-elect Littleton, who also is in the running for Mr. Depew's Senatorial job, if the present deadlock at Albany breaks in his favor-was one not to be easily forgotten by the diners.

Senator Depew, despite the political interment facing him within the next four days, was in his happlest story-telling, anecdotal vein. Mr. Littleton, in his maiden speech here, proved himself a past master at the game in which his brother New Yorker has gained his greenest laurels-after-dinner speakingand President Taft, despite the partial defeat indicated for his legislative programme by the necessity of calling an extra session, was able to pass up politics with a few, good-naturedly humorous remarks anent the deliberateness of the Senate and talk on university life, university spirit, and university ideals and advantages.

President Gives Reasons.

President Taft, who arrived late and was preceded by Senator Depew, spoke after the latter had paid him perhaps as eloquent and as unreserved a tribute as has been accorded him since his occupation of the White House. After saying that no other President under whom he had served-including McKinley and Roosevelt-had been called upon to settle as difficult problems of diplomatic and commercial import as had Mr. Taft, Sen-

Toastmaster Henry E. Davis, who was called upon to serve at the last minute because of the inability of Senator "Tom" Carier, of Montana, to act, introduced the President as "President of our country. mayor of our city, and would-be sister of Alexandria."

Mr. Taft, referring to Senator Depew

"My friend Chauncey, who has the honor to be a dissolving view, has sung his 'swan song' with great beauty.' Mentioning the name of Mr. Littleton as a possible compromise candidate for the New York Senatorship, he introduced the newcomer to political Washington by telling the story of the man with an invalid wife, who had summed up his de-sires with the remarks that he "wished his wife would get well-or something."

To say the programme was elaborate would be to express it too mildly. To say it was "pleasing" would be inadequate. It gave the guests a continuous show throughout the evening. Basehall men were quick to denounce the scheme. Leading patrons of the sport in this city declared that the injection of gambling into professional baseball would wreck the game eventually if the evil was not crushed out at the outset. It is understood that immediate steps will be taken by the National and American League officers to check if possible this menace to the game.

The bookmaking element that was driven out of horse racing by the passage of many anti-racing laws has evidently resorted to baseball to repair its lost for-The total number of baseball fans is in the millions. Before the speechmaking of the evening began, clown hats, grotesque and gaudy, were distributed. Every one was forced that might make them objectionable as by weight of public opinion to don his new spring bonnet.

President Williams introduced the toastmaster, Henry E. Davis, who thanked the guests for the greeting in a few brief remarks. The toastmaster was greeted with a topical song, as were all the speakers. One of the features was the presentation by M. O. Leighton, to each speaker, after the conclusion of his remarks, with some timely souvenir of the dinner. Each presentation was followed by a topical Got a Hero Medal.

The presentation speech to Mr. Little ton-the New Yorker got a hero medallikened him to Jason of ancient fame for his quest of the "golden fleece"-Mr. Roosevelt's own Congressional district-in spite of the efforts of "the dragon of Oyster Bay." The inscription on the
